Psychoanalytic training has always been a controversial subject. The word itself – training – is often the subject of far from neutral discussions. Ausbildung, formation, education are the words often used to emphasize the different philosophies that have inspired the traditions of specific geographical and linguistic area, as well as the organization of psychoanalytic institutes dedicated to the training of analysts.

MOSE is the name of a program based on neutral, collegial and open discussions between psychoanalytic societies about the histories and the structures of their training Institutes. The program is supported by the IPA psychoanalytic committee on Education (PEC) and brings together three societies each time. In Oslo the discussion will be organized according to the timetable that have so far structured the dialogues of more than 50 groups of Training Analysts, Presidents and Candidates around the world.
